

Let's face it; our computers are a bigger part of life than ever before. We work, shop and play using computers. They've replaced our bankbooks, stereos, encyclopedias, and pretty soon they may even make the mailman obsolete. They've become our ledgers, journals, maps, datebooks, photo albums and canvases for our art.

But computers aren't perfect. Files become corrupt, hard drives stop spinning, motherboards malfunction, CPUs call it quits taking our precious data with them.

The best defense is to backup your computers. Backing up data is vital for businesses; lost information can cause a major crisis or worse, lead to business failure. Individuals who don't backup computer data run the same risk. While this may not cause financial ruin, it can certainly be frustrating and even heartbreaking.
